In 1956, President Dwight Eisenhower launched an effort to promote “people-to-people” diplomacy, sparking the creation of several non-profit voluntary organizations in communities across the US, including Arizona. What has been the impact of their work? And what can citizens interested in contributing to global peace, justice and sustainability through deeper international understanding learn from their efforts?

Presenter: Keith Brown, Professor of Global Studies at ASU, and Director of the Melikian Center: Russian, Eurasian and East European Studies
